Polyglot Partners with Language Line Services, Inc.

Alliance Unveils New Integrated Solution for Interpretation Services

MORRISVILLE, N.C. – Language technology company Polyglot Systems, Inc. has entered into a product integration and distribution agreement with Monterey, Calif.-based Language Line Services, Inc., the world's largest provider of language services.

Under the terms of the agreement, the companies have linked Polyglot's proprietary software application, ProLinguaSM, with Language Line's over-the-phone interpretation service. In early 2007, Language Line will begin marketing and selling the integrated solution to the U.S. and Canadian health care markets under the brand name Language Line HealthPortSM.

"The ever-diversifying patient populations of U.S. hospitals demand new tools and technology that aid communication between health care providers and limited English speakers," says Louis Provenzano, Language Line Services' President and Chief Operating Officer. "Language Line Services is proud to introduce Language Line HealthPort to our suite of language access services for hospitals and medical facilities."

HealthPort also assists hospital and health care organizations in complying with the growing number of federal and state laws and requirements related to linguistically and culturally sensitive health care delivery, notes Provenzano. "If a limited-English speaking patient is discharged without understanding their prescriptions or follow-up treatment instructions, a hospital can be held liable for relapses associated with non-compliance," he explains. "With HealthPort hospitals can improve patient outcomes and overall satisfaction." Polyglot President, Dr. Charles Lee, is also enthusiastic about the impact on the health care system noting, "HealthPort delivers on the promise of information technology and its impact on our most vulnerable patient population by empowering every health care provider to communicate with their patients regardless of language barriers."

HealthPort is a web-based software solution that includes a comprehensive library of translated and verified medical questions and phrases commonly used during interactions between health care professionals and patients. HealthPort enables a patient to hear and read medical instructions in his or her native language and provides a fast, easy link to a medically certified Language Line interpreter.

"With our software on the front end and a highly trained Language Line interpreter on the back end, HealthPort offers what we believe is the most effective solution on the market today," says Ed Kavanagh, Polyglot's Chief Technology Officer who lead the partnership and integration efforts for Polyglot. He added, "We are very pleased to be partnering with Language Line. They are a great company, and we are excited that they will be marketing and selling HealthPort to their large and growing base of health care customers"

HealthPort will be available to health care providers in early 2007.
